

QAVALI

My Journey With Qavali

I grew up in Kabul, Afghanistan, where food was at the heart of every moment. We cooked, ate, and shared stories together - it was our way of life.

Moving to Delhi introduced me to Mughlai Indian cuisine, and I instantly fell in love. The rich curries, fragrant biryanis, and charcoal-grilled kebabs were unlike anything I'd tasted before.

But it wasn't just about the food. I discovered Qawwali music and Sufi culture at Nizamuddin Auliya in Delhi. Sitting in those gatherings, listening to the beautiful melodies, I felt something special.

The music told stories that went back hundreds of years - from Persia to the Mughal courts to modern Delhi. It connected me to history in a way I'd never experienced.

When I arrived in Birmingham, I knew I had to share this journey. And that's how Qavali came to be.

This isn't just a restaurant. It's my story - Afghan warmth, Mughlai flavours, Qawwali music, and the spirit of bringing people together. When you eat here, you're tasting a journey of food and memories and hopefully creating some of your own.
